Top head attacks parents

'Affluent neglect' is blighting children's lives

Nicola Woodcock
Education Correspondent

Parents at Britain's leading private schools are terrified of their children's failure and how it will reflect on themselves, one of the country's top head teachers has said.

Clareza Farr, head of St Paul's Girls' School in west London, also accused high-achieving parents of "affluent neglect", where children were not shown enough attention in the classroom. In a series of outspoken comments, Mrs Farr said that many parents showed a "frenetic anxiety" and relucted to accept their child coming second. She warned that children were growing up unable to cope with failure as a result.

"Their children will succeed above all and they're not at all on board with the idea of school as a community, learning to come second or that learning to give ground is an important part of education," she told a workshop at the Girls' Schools Association conference.

Mrs Farr's school charges up to £23,500 a year. Entry is by competitive examination and interview, and the school says that it fosters academic excellence and high aspirations. The difficulties of dealing with some affluent parents were revealed in a session the day on the challenges faced by heads running the schools.

She said: "Parents have very high aspirations — they have a kind of ticking, frenetic anxiety — even the ones who are delighted to deal with us on edge trying to live with us."

"Anything that might result in success isn't happening for their sons or daughter, in however small an arena, there's very, heightened, etc. Such 'snowplough' parents cleared all obsta-

Oil companies plunge after Opec decision

Billion-dollar oil companies have been knocked off the market since Opec's decision to leave the cartel's production quota unchanged. The rout came as the Opec conference in Vienna on Thursday ended in a split, with some members moving to cut oil production, raising the prospect of prices falling below $30 a barrel as the kingdom refused to give its traditional role of balancing global supply. UN misses ebola target

The spread of ebola is continuing to outstrip UN efforts to bring the outbreak under control in West Africa. Agencies will fail to meet Monday's deadline for hitting targets because of a shortage of beds and hospital teams. Page 62

Mosque bombs kill 64

At least 64 worshippers were killed in a series of attacks on a mosque in Nigeria during Friday prayers. The blasts from the extremists' gunmen opened fire on anyone fleeing the blasts. Page 61

Son's remains returned

The remains of an American soldier who was wounded in one of the bloodiest ambushes of the Vietnam War and later captured by enemy hands have been returned to his mother and brothers after 47 years. Page 62

Sleeping beauty is back

An ornate glass painting, Sleeping Lady with Black Unicorn, was returned to England after 100 years, thanks to Gregory Baski, an art historian, who spotted it in the background of the film Star Wars while watching with his daughter. Page 28
